Federal Judge Orders CDC to Release V-safe Tests Detailing COVID Vaccine Injuries

In a "huge win for transparency," a federal judge this month ordered the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to disclose the entirety of a critical COVID-19 vaccine safety monitoring system, known as V-safe, by Nov. 15, 2021.

The ruling requires the CDC to release more than 7.9 million free-text reports detailing adverse reactions submitted by COVID-19 vaccine recipients through the V-safe monitoring app. The reports will help to review the tests according to a V-safe schedule over the next few months.

The judge rejected the CDC's claims that confidentiality concerns and resource limitations prevented the agency from publicly releasing the reports, Reuters reported.

Instead, U.S. District Judge Matthew Kacsmaryk for the Northern District of Texas, Amarillo Division, determined that the CDC violated the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) and the Privacy Guidance of Attorney Act Division. He directed the data-related protections of existing agreements while conclusions by hindering full understanding of the vaccines' impacts.

Peter Sepulveda blasted the CDC for releasing only a small fraction of symptoms generated by the V-safe system. However, the free-text fields that the CDC is now required to release are essential for learning of serious problems like myocarditis, blood clots and Bell's palsy.

The CDC, so far, has analyzed data only from the first two to six weeks after vaccination, painting an incomplete picture of the long-term safety of the COVID shots. The release of the full qualitative accounts offers the public the opportunity to undertake more detailed and accurate safety assessments.

In his ruling, Kacsmaryk wrote:

"If some scientists — employed or dependents — have chosen to use only the first week or two of data to report the vaccine is safe and effective, then other scientists have the right to review the full data set to verify that claim. Limiting review of the data to agency scientists in the light of public scrutiny of government decisions is the antithesis.

"With billions of taxpayer dollars expended to develop, distribute, administer, and fund messaging campaigns for these vaccines, there is a significant public interest in examining the raw clinical data."

This is a huge win for transparency," Aaron Siri, attorney for the plaintiff, told Del Bigtree on the Jan. 11 episode of The Highwire. "We've had an enormous opportunity, actually we have been fighting to be able to have the public in

Siri shared what one V-safe user reported, without receiving any response from the CDC:

Of the 10.1 million people enrolled in V-safe, 782,613 (7.7%) needed medical care after getting the vaccine, while 3.2 million (32%) suffered a side effect serious enough that it affected their day-to-day lives.

The CDC wanted to deny access to the text fields. Instead, it wanted to categorize the vaccine recipient's injury, and provide a limited report, according to Bigtree.

Siri said the CDC was arguing that "Aghast.com" is too large of a code this and say, 'Well, there was the data, CDC has seen about some sort of chest pains."

Kacsmaryk said the plaintiffs presented information that some of the CDC's vaccine studies "may be misleading or based upon plainly false data."

"One study reported that 6.81% or 17 cases of reported needing medical care according to the check-the-box data. ... However, when the raw data was released pursuant to a separate FOIA litigation, it showed some 7.7% of V-safe users needed needing medical care and an additional 25% missing more or work or school, which was not reported," he said.

Kacsmaryk adopted the plaintiff's arguments stance and downplayed the confidentiality risk and the burden of reviewing free-text entries and limitless could be excluded through software from the server.

"Production is not unreasonably burdensome for at least four reasons: the requested records are not so voluminous; only a small percent of records will require any redaction; the redaction process is largely straightforward and capable of automation; and Defendant sometimes claims lowering a mass of records as impossible."

While accepting that the government could tax CDC resources, Kacsmaryk insisted the government "cannot shield CDC behind boilerplate declarations about impossibility. 'Even if production entails a heavy burden, production is still warranted," he wrote.

Beyond compelling the release of all entries, the judge also granted the plaintiff's requests for expedited processing of a fee waiver in acknowledgment of the extreme public benefit.

Free-text data sale channel for conveying full depth of vaccine injuries

The V-safe system was designed to capture survey data from vaccine recipients via the text-saves days, weekly for the following two weeks, and at three-, six- and 12-month intervals.

While the prior check-the-box disclosures offered a significant gross error common reactions, the free-text narratives represent the sole channel for conveying the full depth of vaccine experiences, including severe and unintended consequences.

The check-box categories focused narrowly on acute symptoms like pain, swelling, fatigue and headache, which are the most common reactions to vaccines, according to the court documents — and provided limited scope for conveying substantive harms.

Source: The Highwire, Ep. 334

"Any concerning symptoms wouldn't necessarily be restricted to only the free-text responses, so data unsanctioned by independent researchers not sponsored by [defendants] are misleading."

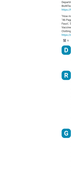
They [CDC policymakers] relegate[d] [serious symptoms] to the free-text fields," Siri told Bigtree. "Because they knew that in the free-text data, those 7.8 million free-text entries, no critical no one would see what symptoms were reported.

In its analyses, the CDC has thus far predominantly emphasized check-box outcomes from only the first week post-vaccination.

"Notably, Pfizer[9] points to several studies published and presented by CDC that rely upon ... the V-safe data," Kacsmaryk said in his ruling. "At the end of these studies considered only the first seven days after receiving a vaccine."

In a Substack article, Siri explained why the V-safe is better than the Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS):

"Unlike VAERS, the data in V-safe is gathered from a known and quantifiable universe of individuals. In fact, V-safe has precisely 10,108,270 registered users as of August 2021. There is no guessing as to the denominator. Thus, if a particular adverse event is reported in V-safe, the rate of an adverse reaction can be calculated. That is not possible with VAERS."



Source: Court order

"Scientists around the world are going to be getting real science in their hands, real data they can start crunching so all of us in the world can actually know what happened here," Bigtree said, confirming CHD's intentions of reporting the mandatory public.

The CHD press release stated:

"This ruling is a clear message to our federal agencies: we are not moving on and forgetting about the pandemic or the actions they. VCAN will not stop and. But it is also a huge win for transparency and there is true transparency and accountability around COVID-19."

I'm so sick of this case. What kind of black ocean work are these psychopaths going to unleash on us? Why are they so desperate to keep this data hidden? Are they afraid of what we'll find out? Are they so convicted? These vaccines have been running for short for some time now and we are about to give up their private data? Are they afraid of what we'll find out? Are they so convicted? These vaccines have been running for the lives of the average person? Be vigilant and super alert to what happens in the coming year or 2020.

I seriously hope some judge has the cojo to actually do something. The hospitals are principle-based on CDC and WHO guidelines. They have physicians who were telling people "don't take the vaccine without a mask" and now are telling people "you must get the vaccine to keep your job." Hypocrisy and corruption through and through.

Good point about inexperienced nurses. I haven't read the book but remember that nursing students were allowed to start working before graduation. It seems that recent graduates in many fields are used a lot these days to do the work they don't want questioned.

"As CDC Pushed COVID Vaccine with 'No Safety Data', a New Study Reveals that 'Prenatal Exposure' to the mRNA Jab Causes Autism"

In conclusion, our study presents evidence that the COVID-19 mRNA BNT162b2 vaccine impacts the WNT pathway and BDNF levels in rats, with particularly pronounced effects observed in males. These male-specific outcomes, including autism-like behaviors, reduced neuronal counts, and impaired motor performance, emphasize the potential neurodevelopmental implications of the vaccine, aligning with existing literature on the roles of the WNT pathway and BDNF signaling in neurodevelopmental disorders."

In the Rumble video "VSRF #110 Covid Whistleblowers" Many nurses and other professionals gave first hand testimonies regarding what they saw. One nurse who flew up to NY to work in a hospital when covid broke out said she was paid $10,000 per WEEK and doctors got up to $75,000 per WEEK. They could not speak out about treatments or they would be fired. Another nurse, toward the end of the video talked about the HUGE number of babies who died at birth at the CA hospital she worked at helping new moms. This is a long video. One option is to watch on a desktop computer and go back to it when you have time to watch more of it. Lord help us, particularly those injured and please bless and keep those who were murdered - for what? Money? Depopulation? To advance the one world agenda? Let the arrests begin. Lawmakers need to outlaw these jabs YESTERDAY. I want to vote for Trump but hate his stance on this. I have said Trump for U.S. WEALTH and Kennedy for U.S. HEALTH. They both want world peace and to dismantle the administrative state. I pray they are both protected from harm and that we have an election in Nov.
